In E-R, AT & BR results from the regular qualifying session were used to determine starting grid for subsequent 100 km Sprint race. Officially, the qualifying winner was also considered a pole position winner, regardless of his Sunday starting grid position, as the results of the Sprint race were used to determine the starting grid for the Grand Prix. Here, the best time from the regular qualifying session is used to identify the fastest qualifying lap and the driver starting the GP from P1 is credited with pole position.

RACE NOTES		Driver steward Derek Warwick, GB. Start was delayed by 65 minutes due to rain and faulty electronics. Prior to start, two exploratory laps were completed behind safety car and the field returned to the pitlane. Race was then shortened to 77 laps started from the pitlane behind safety car. Suspended after 29 laps due to accident and resumed for the remaining distance. Stopped after additional 35 laps due to event time limit. Starting grid for the second segment was based on the running order when stopped and Sergio Pérez started from first position behind safety car from the pitlane. Because the official timing was not interrupted the total race time includes the approximately 19-minutes dormant period between when the race was stopped and resumed. Safety car was deployed. restart rolling start behind the safety car. Because start as well as restart were taken from the pitlane race distance may not be completely accurate but no adjustments were made.
